WHERE EVERYONE FEELS AT HOME

PHONE No. 1— John Spireas, Manager

NIGHTINGALE W. I.

The fortnightly meeting of the W. I. M. was held at the home of Mrs. F. W. Murray on Thursday, January 25th. Fifteen members and four visitors attended in spite of the cold weather.

Arrangements were completed for the farewell party for Mr. and Mrs. I. Murray who are leaving our community to start farming near Bowden.

The program for the year, which the Misses Myrtle Stoodley and Mary Larsen typed for the institute, were distributed to the various members. All the ladies agreed that a small present be given to each of the girls in appreciation of their work.

Mrs. L. Hilton, who is in charge of the Red Cross Work, distributed suits of pyjamas to the members wishing to see and explained just how they are to be made, in order to meet requirements.

As January 25th is the day the Scotch people receive the memory of Robert Burns, a concert of Scotch songs was arranged by Mrs. W. Murray. All the members took part, the winners being Mrs. Holt and Mrs. Geo. Thurston.

A delicious lunch was served by the hostess assisted by Mrs. Murray, Mrs. A. Kimmett and Mrs. Ted Thurston. The next meeting is to be held at the home of Mrs. L. Hilton on Feb. 8.

EDMONTON LETTER

By T. B. Windross

Edmonton, Alberta, Jan. 29.—Alberta entered a crisis over the past week-end wrapped up in the question of whether provincial politics, with its rancor and its own intense problems, would be tossed into the centre of a federal crisis by the forcing of an election campaign at the same time as the federal election.

The national election, set for March 1st, will have just one chief issue, that will be the question of whether the Dominion is going to change its government in the middle of its war years. The issue will be no question of whether Canada is to remain in the war, for the leading national parties, competing only in their own interests, are not going to desert the war effort.

It is to be expected that there will be much mud thrown at the present provincial government by the other parties; it already has been accused of not prosecuting the war to the full extent of the need, and there will, in addition, be a great deal of criticism of the handling of the election campaign. The groups in question, the King government, including Premier Mitchell Hepburn of Ontario, will have much to say about the present provincial government.

Mr. Mackenzie King's action in dissolving parliament after just three hours of the session, but the prime minister has already replied that for the good of the nation at large there was nothing else to do after the injection of provincial animosities and national political ambitions into the subject of Canadianism.

Reports from Ontario have indicated already that the people of that province are likely to demand Premier Mitchell Hepburn for his interference, when the time comes.

In Alberta, Premier William Aberhart also thrust himself into the federal picture, by contemplating Prime Minister King for calling a federal election—although this would normally be a Dominion election year away.

Mr. King's action, Mr. Aberhart pronounced in a formal statement, was "strategic rather than democratic."

Surely another two or three months would not have mattered if everything is in order and if the present federal government is functioning as efficiently as its members claim it is," said the Alberta premier. Sudden announcement of a federal election, within a few weeks, "and the irregular and hasty dissolution of parliament without a moment's notice, are certainly contrary to what the people have a right to expect at such a time as this; it has filled the minds of the people with wonderment and left them bewildered," he cried.

He said that people would resent the "summary dismissal of the opposition without a chance for them to be informed regarding matters of grave public importance." Opposition members of the Alberta legislature were amused by that bit of the premier's pronouncement; they remember how they have been refused information by the Aberhart government in the past and how they have been barred when attempting to speak on controversial issues.

THE CHURCH AND THE COMMUNITY

The place of the Church in the community may be viewed from many angles, for her ministries are manifold. In any town or city the churches are among the best public buildings from the standpoint of accommodation, architecture, etc., and are built at no expense to the public treasury, a fact which Rusk considered one of the greatest stories of the British people. Needless to say, most of such criticism has come from those outside the pale of the Church and its activities. Those who have shared her ministries whether as givers or receivers, and especially those who are also members of other social organizations, have no need of arguments to show that the greatest fraternity the world has ever seen is the brotherhood of believers. As for social work, the Church has pioneered in every form of social work, and when these activities have been taken over by the State or other organizations, she has repeatedly come to the rescue when these bodies have been tardy or failed to function.

In the great world outside the Church, Christians have always taken their places. Just after the World War a survey was made in the United States to ascertain what classes of people were contributing to general benevolent funds. It was discovered that away over seventy-five per cent both of contributors and of the amount contributed came from those who were actively engaged in church work. In our recent drive for Red Cross Funds one can easily guess that the result was not otherwise. Not long since, a visitor to Calgary was entertained by the various clubs and churches. Commenting on his visit, he said that this city, as elsewhere throughout the continent, was a model of the men who were heading up other organizations were the same men who were active in their various churches. Especially in this time of all-embracing work in education, a close study will reveal that those who are winning scholarships and those who are engaged in the various educational enterprises, irrespective of their personal attitude for all too many have forgotten the bridge that carried them over, have had a Christian background and in many cases came from devout, pious homes.

A comparison of communities where regular church services are well kept, no matter how small the congregation, and those where there is no public worship, reveals some startling facts. Police records show that the average moral standing is higher wherever there is public worship. The cultural activities are also more numerous and more efficient. Further, the economic standing whether measured by the amount produced or by the type of home and its furnishings, is always higher.

But the supreme service of the Church is its gift of worship. And the size of our worship is the measure of our need of a living greater than ourselves whom we can reach and from whom we can gain that which is lacking in our own lives. The overwhelming confidence in man's self-sufficiency is a disease which is wrecking our society. Although most instant in Germany's idea of the superman, our own ideas are not unaltered by this dry rot. That "man is the measure of all things" is a diabolical error which Greek philosophy has spread almost twenty-five centuries ago. Yet it has recurred time and again in human history and has always ended in dismal disaster. In no man's mind is this idea, stands the truth that man is never greater than when he is on his knees before his Maker.

The greatest task of the church is its willing to worship. Here it is difficult to measure results. For life's greatest desires are never discovered in immediate returns. But the testimony of thousands reveals the fact that the hour spent in worship, apart from the usual routine of life when in the quiet of the church service we are drawn away to think of God and the great ideals which have served humanity, that hour has brought inspiration and courage and strength. Again, it may well be that it is the very stillness with which we approach the sacred elements of bread and wine which extracts the fever out of our hurried lives and becomes the most potent factor that enters human life.

The priest, the clerkman or minister, whatever you want to call him, is an idealist. To this some would add, an impractical idealist but we are not so sure of that. He goes about his duties confident that whenever and wherever he can persuade his fellow-men to stop and worship God, he is rendering him a greater service than he could render if he were able to make him a gift of one thousand dollars and that under the most distasteful circumstances. The Church has not failed in her ministries to the destitute but to show a man how he can earn a thousand dollars is much better than to give him that amount. Better yet, is to inspire him so that he himself will discover the means by which he can earn that thousand dollars. In inspiration, in the power to discover, in the mastery of self and man's surroundings, in some such terms as these the real value of the church to the community must be expressed.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

"Love" is the subject of the Lesson-Sermon at all Christian Science Churches on Sunday. The Golden Text is John 15:1. One of the scriptures of the lesson is "The Lord hath appeared of old unto me, saying, Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love; therefore with loving kindness have I drawn thee" (Jeremiah 31:3). One of the corrective passages from "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, is "Love is impartial and universal in its adaptation and bestowal. It is the open fount which cries, 'Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters!'"

BATTLE BOWLERS
MADE OF POWDER

"Tin Hat" Triumph of British Plastics Industry.

The familiar Army helmets, nicknamed "battle bowlers," may soon be made of moulded powder instead of steel.

This is only one of the new uses for plastic materials, those versatile products of synthetic resin which have become pack of all trades in modern life by providing thousands of articles for commerce and the home—from electric switches and unbreakable crockery to truck wheels and billiard balls.

Experiments with plastic materials to replace "tin hats" are showing that the helmets can not only be cheaper, more quickly produced and lighter in weight, but also stronger than the steel helmet.

More than 120 different articles are now being made for the war by the British plastics industry. They include bomb-release equipment, cart-ridge cases, certain types of bomb cases, rifle butts, mine-finding equipment. Army badges, lightweight control insulations, stocks for three gun aircraft propeller blades and transparent hooding for gun turrets in aeroplanes.

British plastic trade is busy in other directions. "Certain firms have already reported that their exports of moulding materials and products were doubled during the first two months of the year," said an official of the British Plastics Federation, "nor is there any danger of its continuing, being imperilled because plenty of skilled labour has been secured."
